

2026 Artist Wilderness Connection Residency Fact Sheet

What is the Artist Wilderness Connection?

The goal of Artist Wilderness Connection is to connect artists and the public with our wildlands in beautiful Northwest Montana. AWC is a collaborative project started in 2004 between the Glacier Art Museum (formerly Hockaday Museum of Art), Flathead National Forest, Bob Marshall Wilderness Foundation, and Helena-Lewis and Clark National Forest (formerly additionally with Swan Valley Connections). To date, 60+ artists have participated in the program which consists of three components: Artist Residency, Forest Experience, and Community Extension. Artists benefit from having a remote setting to focus on their art and the community benefits from the presentations and artistic works that the artists offer from their experiences.

The Artist Residency

The program places professional working artists in various disciplines, media and styles in remote forest cabins for five to up to 16 days followed by a public community presentation or program related to their residency. Group/multiple artist collaborations are considered and encouraged.

The Forest/Wilderness Experience

The program connects artists with the Bob Marshall and Great Bear Wilderness areas. The backcountry cabins in the program are located in the Flathead National Forest and the Helena-Lewis and Clark National Forest, 5 to 15 miles from the nearest trailhead. Travel to the cabin is by foot over uneven ground. Artist's personal items, food and art supplies are packed in by mule and horse. Some cabins are very private, suggesting solitude, reflection and personal work; other sites offer the experience of working and/or living with Forest Service crews. The best residency experiences come from plans that allow for the unexpected and are entered into with an open mind.

The Community Extension

A Montana-based, educational public presentation accompanies each residency. It may include demonstrating an art form or techniques to the public. It could include a showing, performance, open house, workshop or training session where the public or school groups can participate and learn from the artist about the experiences gained through their participation in the program. The workshops, performances, exhibits and/or other presentations should communicate the values, processes, features and resources of both the artist and the wilderness setting. Program participants also donate a representative piece of their work for the Program's collection, or to help raise funds directly supporting the Artist Wilderness Connection program.

How to Apply

AWC applications are accepted online with a Google form only through the Glacier Art Museum website. Google forms must be completed in one sitting, so we suggest having your materials prepared in advance.
